Television What To Watch

Killer In A Small Town, C4

Inside The Box What Keith Watson Saw Last Night

Having lived in Ipswich for a while and supported the Tractor Boys since I was a nipper, the horrific events in the winter of 2006 really hit home. Ipswich just wasn't the kind of place where serial killing happened.

What Killer In A Small Town (C4) did, quietly and effectively and with an admirable lack of sensationalism, was to bring back the terror of the weeks when five prostitutes were murdered in Britain's quickest ever killing spree. It was a terror centred on the fear that if it could happen in Ipswich, it could happen anywhere.

Through interviews with relatives still angered and baffled by what became of their sisters and daughters – who were leading lives they knew little about – the film opened up the underground side of the dark heart of the tale: why it happened. Steve Wright, the forklift truck driver convicted of the crime, has kept silent on his motives. Maybe there are some things we should be grateful not to know.

you wanted her to put a sock in it. The bite had to come from The Challenge, freshly tacked on to the title, which boiled down to handing one volunteer over to a plastic surgeon and another to a make-up artist to see who could work the most magic.

Which was all a bit fake. It would have taken an entire cosmetics counter to fill the lines in Mary's face brought on by a smoking/sunbed combo so no wonder she had the full surgical works. By contrast Kathleen just had to be talked out of wearing tablecloths and cured of an aversion to moisturiser.

Things took a much-needed turn for the better in Skins (E4) with the arrival of a character it was actually possible to care two hoots about. Fresh off the plane from Congo, polite, impressionable Thomas was a welcome break from cartoon gangsters, sour-faced lesbians and willy-waving potty-mouths. Thanks to a charismatic turn from Merveille Lukeba, Thomas gave Skins its soul back. So what did they do? Send him packing after one episode.

There was a brutal logic to the axing of ice queen Nicky Hambleton-Jones from Ten Years Younger (C4). Someone must have spotted a tiny wrinkle on her glacial skin and snitched. So out with the old and in with the new-ish in the form of the all-purpose brand that is Myleene Klass. You want jungle babe? Myleene does jungle babe. You want supportive surrogate sister? Myleene's your woman.

I'm not proud to admit it but I rather missed the condescending edge of Ms Hambleton-Jones. Once you'd heard Myleene squeal 'wow, you've got a great figure' for the umpteenth time,

Ten Years Younger, C4

Selling Out TV Merchandise To Treasure

Top Gear Baseball Cap: It's unlikely Jeremy Clarkson will be voted GQ's Best Dressed Man of 2009... or any other year, come to that. The sartorial tsunami's dress sense having been dismissed by Trinny and Tranny as that of a market trader – trading in what? Dressed tripe? – it's moot whether any sharp-edged metrosexual will snap up this 'nicely understated, brushed cotton baseball cap with brass buckle adjuster' (£14.55) unless out to make an ironic fashion statement. My concern is that, in certain nightspots, an innocent abroad sporting this particular logo might inadvertently find himself besieged by glassy-eyed clubbers.

Ramsay's Kitchen Nightmares USA, C4, 9pm

Today's Highlights With Sharon Lougher & David Baldwin

Pick Of The Day Ramsay's Kitchen Nightmares USA C4, 9pm

Ramsay's nightmares in the US have never been as sane or as sensibly edited as his nightmares in Britain but never mind – we're still game, just about, for another series of Gord swearing his head off at useless Americans and playing family therapist for the sake of a decent dinner. In the firing line first is Giuseppe's, a family-owned Italian in Michigan whose father and son team are constantly and unhelpfully at each other's throats. We smell uproar... SL

Coronation Street ITV1, 7.30pm

A ripping yarn reaches boiling point tonight as a desperate Tony finally confesses to his stunned wife Carla that he hired the killer to bump off her lover Liam. What will she do next? And, in other Corrie news, will Norris join Mary on a cruise? Excitement, excitement. SL

Ketch! And Hiro-Pon Get It On BBC3, 11pm

A now for something completely different... namely, mime and acrobatics from a silent comedy duo from Japan. Madcap, mohicaned pair Ketch! And Hiro-pon have spent a decade entertaining the international live circuit (performing under their other name, Gamarjobat) with cool wordless sight gags and movie parodies. Now they've got their own pilot in a late-night slot that could pave the way to more cult fandom. Proof that actions really can speak louder than words... SL

Film Of The Day Anchorman: The Legend Of Ron Burgundy BBC1, 11.40pm

If you're a fan of goofy comedy, then Anchorman is your Citizen Kane. Largely improvised by a cast led by Will Ferrell as a misogynistic newsreader, it's both completely stupid and sneakily clever. It's endlessly quotable too, like when Paul Rudd's reporter names his testicles James Westfall and Dr Kenneth Noisewater. Very silly but what genius silliness it is. DB
